TURNER REGISTERS AS SEX OFFENDER IN OHIO AFTER ASSAULT

I Former Stanford University swimmer Brock Turner has registered as a sex offender in his home state of Ohio, following his conviction for sexually assaulting an unconscious woman in 2015 and public outrage over his six-month jail sentence. The controversy over a sentence seen as too short and over the fact Turner, a one-time U.S. Olympic hopeful, was released early has stoked intense debate about sexual assault on U.S. college campuses and beyond. Turner, 21, was freed from jail last Friday after serving just half of his sentence for convictions of assault with intent to commit rape, penetration of an intoxicated person, and penetration of an unconscious person. California jail inmates can serve half time for factors like good behavior. REUTERS

FIRE GUTS AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT SHED IN MARYLAND

2 A fire on Tuesday gutted a storage shed at a U.S. Department of Agriculture complex in Maryland that was closed last week because of threats, fire officials said. A spokesman for the Prince George's County fire department reported the blaze at Building 426 at the USDA's Beltsville facility was extinguished just under two hours after he sent an initial tweet on it. An Agriculture Department statement said the fire occurred at a storage shed and there were no injuries. The cause of the blaze is under investigation, it added. Live TV footage showed the wood frame building engulfed in flames, with part of the walls missing and a section of the roof gone as firefighters poured water onto the structure. A USDA spokeswoman had no details on whether the building was burned to the ground or if anything was stolen. REUTERS

PAYPAL, MASTERCARD REACH DEAL FOR STORE PAYMENTS

3 MasterCard Inc. said on Tuesday it had expanded its deal with payment processor PayPal Holdings Inc., which would allow customers to use PayPal's payment services in stores. PayPal's partnership follows a similar deal with MasterCard's larger rival Visa Inc. in July as the company looks to expand its payments network. PayPal will allow users to select a credit or debit card as the default payment method and share data on transactions made through MasterCard's tap-and-pay feature, which allows the shopper to wave a card or mobile phone over a reader to pay, the companies said in a statement. As part of the deal, MasterCard will allow PayPal users to withdraw cash from their accounts using a debit card and also waive the digital wallet fee it currently charges PayPal. REUTERS

World's Only Curious George Store could close

The store's owner said he isn't sure if the store could survive in another location.

One real estate developer isn't monkeying around when it comes to plans that could replace an iconic store in Harvard Square.

Equity One is planning a three-story mall in Cambridge, according to CBS Boston, which would need the space currently occupied by The World's Only Curious George Store for a stairway, elevator and lobby.

The developer bought a trio of buildings in the area Brattle, JFK and Mount Auburn streets last October for $85 million, the Boston Herald reported. According to Curbed, the lease for the Curious George Store and others in the building expire next year. Plans call for the buildings to be linked

"I don't view this as good guys and bad guys, it's just interests, and it's the city deciding what they want their city to be."

to form the mall that will be situated on at least the bottom level, according to Curbed. The center of the top two floors would be made of glass.

The World's Only Curious George Store owner Adam Hirsch told the Herald that the price of merchandise hasn't kept up with rising rents.

"We are hoping we can stay as long as we can. ... The big question is how can we continue to do what we do in another location?" he said.

"I don't view this as good guys and bad guys," Hirsch added. "It's just interests, and it's the city deciding what they want their city to be. I'm unfortunately a small player in all of this, and we don't have much say about what happens."

CBS Boston noted that the Curious George Store was not the only iconic store in Harvard Square that faces closure. Cambridge reportedly wants to renovate the plaza, which could kick out the Out of Town News kiosk.

"Harvard Square is very popular, it's become very expensive and more attractive to chains over the years," a passerby told the station. "I can't say it's surprising, it's kind of sad."

The redevelopment plans are reportedly set to go to the Cambridge Historical Commission meeting on Thursday.

Judge may rule this week on body camera pilot program

In Tuesday's hearing, the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association's president took the stand.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
letters@metro.us

In a hearing on Tuesday afternoon concerning the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association's claims that that the city violated an agreement concerning the body camera pilot program, Suffolk Superior Court Judge Douglas Wilkins said that he hopes to have a ruling by Friday so that the program can begin on Monday.

The BPPA says that when Boston Police Commissioner William Evans assigned 100 officers to wear body cameras after none volunteered, he violated the agreement made by BPPA President Patrick Rose, Evans and Mayor Marty Walsh that the program would be volunteer only.

Both sides were in agreement in court that the body camera pilot program should go forward, but the BPPA believes that their officers were not given enough time to volunteer nor were there many questions about the program answered by city officials.

"That's not our function, that's the city's function," Rose said on the stand.

Rose testified that from the time he learned that there were no volunteers to when officers were being ordered into the program, it was maybe one week. He said that he heard reports that Evans said would begin ordering officers to participate only one or two days after he learned of the volunteer shortage himself.

The Boston Police Patrolmen's Association and the City of Boston participated in a hearing on Tuesday concerning the body camera pilot program.

"I don't believe I am wrong," Rose said. "I tried to sit with [Evans and Walsh] and work it out. I asked a very simple thing: withdraw the orders for people."

The city of Boston's attorney, Kay Hodge, said that the city does not believe the union did enough to get officers interested in the program. In court, she brought up how Rose had previously discouraged officers from volunteering, though Rose specified that that was prior to him reaching an agreement about the program's terms with the city.

"We have never been against the program," Rose said. "We were against, in June, people volunteering without an agreement [in place]."

Rose also testified that he sent a press release detailing the union's support of implementing new technologies such as body cameras, another press release after an agreement with the city was signed, a two-page open letter to all BPPA members in which he said that he described it as a "great agreement" and another internal memo meant to clarify that the union was behind the program.

Hodge noted that with 1,500 police officers, neither side contemplated that a situation would occur in which there were no volunteers.

State trooper injured after allegedly drunk driver hits cruiser

A Massachusetts state trooper was injured early Tuesday morning when an allegedly drunk driver struck his cruiser on Route 93. The fully marked cruiser was stopped on the Southeast Expressway because the trooper was investigating a two-car crash at the same location, state police said in a statement.

Neither driver in that prior crash was injured. The trooper, whose name was not released, suffered injuries not considered life threatening and was "conscious and alert" while he was transported to Tufts Medical Center, officials said. He was released this morning.

The crash occurred south of Massachusetts Avenue, around 1:30 a.m. Lily Reid, 21, of Quincy was identified as the driver of the Chevrolet Malibu that struck the cruiser, a state police Ford Explorer utility vehicle.

Reid was arrested for operating under the influence of alcohol and failure to move over for an emergency vehicle.

Owen Labrie's lawyers respond to Chessy Prout's remarks

"We were troubled that, when she's interviewed and she makes statements purporting to know what the jury was thinking, that that statement goes unchallenged in the media," they said.

After Chessy Prout went on NBC's "Today" show to publicly identify herself as Owen Labrie's victim in the high-profile New Hampshire prep school sexual assault case, Labrie's lawyers appeared on the "CBS Morning Show" on Tuesday to respond to her statements.

In her interview, Prout brought up how the jury "didn't believe that [Labrie] did it knowingly" — even though she believes that he did — and how the verdict "disgusted" her.

Labrie's lawyers, Jaye Rancourt and Robin Malone, reiterated on Tuesday morning that though Prout believes Labrie assaulted her knowingly, that's "not what the jury found."

"Owen was tried on aggravated felonious sexual assault charges, which is what we typically defined as rape, or non-consensual contact," Rancourt said. "The jury acquitted him. That means they found him innocent, they found that he did not do that."

Labrie was found guilty on three misdemeanor counts of having sex with a person under the age of consent as well as using a computer to seduce a minor.

Prout also commented in her interview that she would not have pressed charges if she received a letter of apology. Labrie's lawyers stated on "CBS This Morning" that they were not aware of this option.

"To the best of our knowledge, that was never offered as a plea bargain," said Rancourt. "Just offer an apology and the charges would go away? That was never offered."

Malone told CBS reporters that she and Rancourt are pursuing a new trial, with the next hearing on Oct. 5.

When asked if they believed Prout was lying in her interview, Labrie's lawyers said that they cannot comment on her statements but were troubled that they were not challenged.

"We were troubled that, when she's interviewed and she makes statements purporting to know what the jury was thinking, that that statement goes unchallenged in the media, and that then it's picked up that he's a rapist, that he's a predator, that he's this horrible person, when the facts are that he was found innocent of that conduct," Rancourt said. "And when you're innocent, you're innocent, bottom line."

Candidates turn up the heat over national security

On Wednesday, Clinton and Trump will participate in a televised forum on national security sponsored by a veterans group.

The presidential campaign's focus shifted to national security on Tuesday as Republican Donald Trump pledged to help female veterans during a Virginia Beach campaign stop, and with Democratic vice presidential candidate Tim Kaine set to deliver a related speech in North Carolina.

Trump, speaking at the event in Virginia, a state with a large military population, began with a pledge to help female veterans if he wins the Nov. 8 election and also said he would work with Russia's president, Vladimir Putin, to "solve the problem" posed by the Islamic State militant group.

"Putin looks at Hillary Clinton and he smiles," Trump said of the Democratic presidential nominee.

Meanwhile Kaine, Clinton's running mate, will deliver a national security speech in North Carolina criticizing Trump's foreign policy credentials, saying he botched his meeting last week with Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto.

"The centerpiece of Trump's campaign is building a wall and making Mexico pay for it. It's even a chant at his rallies," Kaine will say, according to excerpts of the speech reviewed by Reuters. "Yet when Trump finally had the chance to look President Peña Nieto in the eye, he said it never came up."

"In other words, he choked. Turns out, Donald isn't such a great negotiator after all," Kaine will add of the New York businessman.

Clinton, a former secretary of state, made similar remarks about Trump's visit to Mexico on Monday in an interview with ABC.

Ahead of Tuesday's events, Clinton's campaign organized a press conference with military veteran supporters before Trump's event in Virginia and released a new television advertisement showing veterans and their families reacting to statements Trump has made about national security.

In the ad, their reactions are juxtaposed with footage of Trump saying that he knows more about Islamic State than U.S. military generals, criticizing Sen. John McCain for being captured as a prisoner of war in Vietnam and comparing what he called his own sacrifices as a businessman to those of parents of slain soldiers.

Clinton told a get-out-the-vote rally in Tampa, Florida, that she, not Trump, is best prepared to protect the U.S. military serving overseas and take on Islamic State.

"We are going to do whatever is necessary for as long as it takes to bring ISIS to justice," Clinton said.

"I am a very patient person, I don't quit, I don't give up, I don't blink," she added.

Both Florida and Virginia are considered swing states that could play a pivotal role in the outcome of the November election.

Trump's campaign moved to pre-empt the criticism from Clinton's camp on Tuesday by releasing a letter signed by 88 retired U.S. generals and admirals who are supporting the Republican nominee's White House bid. REUTERS times, like Idris Elba or Gillian Anderson. These suggestions have been duly noted. Which is why they just offered $150 million to present 007 Daniel Craig to do it at least two more times.

We are going to do whatever is necessary for as long as it takes to bring ISIS to justice."

Their intransigence is matched only by the actor himself, with both sides engaged in an apparent stubborn-off. Not long ago Craig — who's so gung-ho about the role he said he'd rather "slash" his wrists than do it again, and spent "Spectre" looking like he was steeling himself for an upcoming rectal exam — was offered $100 million, which he turned down.

Maybe he can get them up to $200 million? Would $500 million coax him away from a life doing theater, making noble indies about sand or just hanging with cool wife Rachel Weisz?

And would a haul big enough to fill a money bin be enough to make him take the franchise as seriously as he did when he started — when the idea of a dour, anguished and decidedly less sexist 007 still seemed fresh? In any case, get on the trolley, Bond execs: If this were Marvel, it would've replaced Craig, now 48, with a teenager two years ago.

Lena Dunham causes more commotion with resurfaced racist tweets

Like a train wreck you can't turn away from, Lena Dunham is back on blast with racist tweets from 2010 and 2011 that were resurfaced and are spreading like wildfire.

For the 30-year-old actress, the backlash must feel routine after she found herself apologizing just days ago following an interview with Amy Schumer. During the segment, Dunham claimed Giants wide receiver Odell Beckham Jr. chose to avert his male gaze from her presence at the Met Gala because she was sporting a tuxedo and a bow tie. It wasn't long before swarms of Twitter users criticized the self-proclaimed feminist for her narcissism and sexualization of the black male body. She later apologized for the statements, which she attributed to her own insecurity as a plus-sized woman among a room of supermodels.

This week, in a not-so-shocking series of events, the star's digital past has come back to haunt her with a series of racially insensitive tweets from 2010 and 2011 surfacing. The tweets include one from 2011 in which she wrote, "An uncool thought to have: 'Is that guy walking in the dark behind me a rapist? Never mind, he's Asian.'"

Outraged Twitter users are demanding an apology — some telling her to delete her account — and if the past speaks for itself, Dunham's next move is on its way.

Kanye West wants Saint Pablo to be "internet-proof"

Kanye West brought his ridiculously awesome flying stage to the Boston show of his Saint Pablo tour last weekend, and it was even cooler than it sounds, which is to say: seriously, unbelievably, crazy cool.

While the stage, suspended overhead by four cables, was the main attraction, fans who may have looked forward to hearing West's next major rant or another George W. Bush/I-Swift moment were probably disappointed: The typically loquacious artist was mostly mum. He assured fans it was all part of the plan: 2016 was a great year to be a Kanye West fan, he said, so the artist was just keeping his comments "internet proof" out of respect for his fans.

"Y'all get a free year" from defending him, he jokingly told the crowd.

West did take one major break to address the crowd during an interlude during "Runaway," in which he shared some folk wisdom with the crowd that likely had a familiar ring to some of the more devoted parishioners of the Church of Yeezus.

"The media, from when you're a little ass kid, tells you not to love yourself," West said. "They take something out of you and try to sell it back to you, like that Benz you buy yourself out of college. Or that townhouse. Something that you've been fighting for your entire life and it was taken from you as a child, that you always had inside of you. And that's self-love."

Then, with his voice autotuned to the looping piano accompaniment, Kanye started to sing. "They teach you not to love yourself, but if you don't love yourself how can you love someone?" he sang. "That's why I love you so much, 'cuz everybody knows I love me so much."

Azealia Banks is now selling random belongings online

Azealia Banks announced to Facebook over the weekend that she's selling a ton of her stuff online at her Depop page, called Cheap K-t (rhymes with hunt) Xchange. Hmm ...

The 25-year-old, who has a reputation for being volatile on social media, waxed dramatic on Facebook about waking up one day and deciding she needed to change, realizing that "similar to my emotional tendencies, I was holding on to so many things that I have no use for."

Perusing the page, it looks like an array of junk — she may be broke, but she certainly does not have expensive taste. It's reasonably priced, like $5 for turquoise MAC eye shadow and $2 for an Azealia Banks sticker. (Although, Slay, why would you price two paperback copies of Judy Blume's "Are You There, God, It's Me, Margaret?" for $21? Just because they're "vintage"?)

Natasha Lyonne hearts New York

The actress talks her new horror film "Antibirth" and why she's scared of the L train.

mattprigge@metro.us
matt.prigge@metro.us

Natasha Lyonne is not the kind of actress you just bombard with questions. She speaks her mind, and is excited if you go along with her. We're supposed to talk about "Antibirth," an indie horror film that she produced, in which she plays Lou, a stoner in a nowhere town filled with drug-addled former Marines who wakes up after a wild party knocked-up — not with a baby but with some unidentified hell beast. But the "Orange is the New Black" performer and I wind up talking about whatever, starting with my assumption that she's currently in Los Angeles. (She's not.)

Are you in Los Angeles?
Never. I've never been to Los Angeles.

I don't believe that.
Not my problem.

I've seen a number of films you were in that were clearly shot there.

CGI, man.
It was all CGI?
Everything I do is CGI.

It was very convincing.
Thank you. And it was low budget. All of the budget goes to the CGI work.

As a New Yorker, are you someone who's really down on Los Angeles?
You know, what I feel about Los Angeles is this: Who cares? I spent so much of my teenage years on the debate of New York versus Los Angeles and how awful it is and how integrity can only live in New York, and so forth. Now, I just feel like I'm too old to have that conversation again.

How do you feel about Brooklyn?
My father's from Flatbush, so I never got the appeal of Brooklyn. Especially with the L train. Let's be honest about the L train: Is it my imagination or is a giant catastrophe coming our way? Everybody knows it. I don't like the fact that they know the train needs handled in a major way. You're talking millions of rides before they get to the actual construction. And they already know the train is so problematic. That to me spells eerie, impending catastrophe. I don't like it. I would strongly advise people to reroute prematurely. I know it's an inconvenience, but I don't trust the L train.

It's another thing New Yorkers can complain about. It's a great city to just be mean.
It's great. The anonymity and vitriol and belligerent nonsense cannot be beat. [Laughs] The consequence-free nature of giving somebody a shoulder because they're carrying their umbrella too low on a crowded street — where else in the world can you get that kind of excitement? That's why everyone in New York is so great. We're a very happy people, because we're constantly dealing with our angst.

Boyd Holbrook plays a DEA agent on "Narcos," whose second season hits Netflix on Friday. JUAN PABLO GUTIERREZ/NETFLIX

'Narcos' star Boyd Holbrook is back to chasing Escobar

He's the voice behind the hit Netflix show and the face of the action.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

"Narcos," the sleeper Netflix hit series about the rise and fall of Colombian drug kingpin Pablo Escobar, finally returned last week for Season 2 — which is all about the drug kingpin's demise.

Boyd Holbrook, 34, previously known for "Milk" and "Gone Girl," not only stars in the show as DEA Agent Steve Murphy — who along with his partner, Agent Javier Pena (played by Pedro Pascal), led the manhunt for Escobar in the '80s and '90s — but also provides its narration, in a voice-over many have compared to Ray Liotta's in "Goodfellas."

"There's so much interaction on the show where you have to read, unless you're bilingual. And then there's the history, the action," explains Holbrook about his approach to narrating. "There's all these dynamics going on, so I wanted to enable people to get into a kind of trance with the show, and take them into the show that way."

Before the premiere, we spoke with the Kentucky native about what we can expect from the next 10 episodes, which came out on Netflix last Friday at midnight.

Tell us about the preparation and training.

I didn't do any physical training, but we did get to go to Quantico for a week. Pedro and I, Javier and Steve got us in to train with the DEA. For me that was really eye-opening, you know, running into houses with rubber bullets and flying at each other. It was pretty intensive, you really get to see what it's like in their situation.

What are some of your favorite films/shows about guys on both sides of the law?

I don't think there's a show that's ever been better than "Breaking Bad," in terms of that sort of genre.

Is your Spanish better than Murphy's?

The actual Murphy, no, but my Spanish is better than the Murphy I play on the show. Much better! Unfortunately, I didn't have a Colombian girlfriend to help me out with my Spanish, but I was [in Colombia] pretty much for 18 months, so you have to learn a little bit.

What were some of your favorite places you visited while filming?

I tried to experience South America as much as possible. I was in Patagonia quite a bit, took a bunch of motorcycle trips, got my PADI license for scuba diving. I did all kinds of cool sh—.

Were you at all surprised at how popular the show has been?

Yeah, I really had no idea the show would do as well as it has. The first year was really hard on us, it was difficult, how extreme of a location we were working at. I would say we were pioneering the film industry down in Colombia.

What can viewers expect from Season 2, now that Escobar's demise is imminent?

It's fascinating, it's really interesting to already know the historical outcome of it all but to see how it actually happens — Pablo's rise to king status, and then how it unravels.

Which book to curl up with this fall

Whether you're feeling contemplative or angsty, we have the perfect autumn read for every scenario.

NICOLE HUNT

FRIENDS AND DREAMS

"Swing Time" by Zadie Smith

The prize-winning author sets her highly anticipated fifth novel in one of her favorite locations: North London. And then she branches out, telling the story of two young friends and dancers across England and West Africa as their friendship grows and then abruptly ends. In the process, the novel explores the meaning of friendship, identity and how our roots shape us.

There's nothing like a pumpkin latte and a good book. iStock

FAMILY DRAMA

"Here I Am" by Jonathan Safran Foer

It's Foer's first novel in 11 years and it's already being touted as "monumental." No pressure. Foer's work looks at a family, based in Washington, D.C., as they navigate crisis. The book aims to answer, "How can we claim our own identities when our lives are linked so closely to others?"

WHEN YOU MISS "STRANGER THINGS"

"The Beach at Night" by Elena Ferrante

The woman who gave the world the popular "Neapolitan" novels (1.2 million sold and counting) is back with a 38-page book told from the perspective of a lost doll abandoned in a beach town. It was written for children, but it's dark stuff. And no doubt Ferrante's adult fans will be lining up for it.

A SOCIAL DETOX MIGHT BE IN ORDER

"Tell Everyone" by Alfred Hermida

The academic attempts to make sense of our lives in the social-media age as he unpicks our collective need to broadcast and share across as many channels as possible and how it's changing the world around us.

IN NEED OF A GOOD LAUGH?

"Today Will Be Different" by Maria Semple

The author already deserves points for being brave enough to unapologetically admit that her protagonist, Eleanor Flood, is based on herself. In the novel, a woman who seems to have it all on paper must juggle a string of life's messes, learning that even the best of affirmations can't cut it sometimes.

AN OFF-BEAT LOVE STORY

"The Lesser Bohemians" by Eimear McBride

Following her multi-award-nominated debut, "A Girl Is a Half-Formed Thing," McBride writes a '90s love story about an 18-year-old Irish girl, newly moved to London, and the older actor she meets there. Fireworks and drama ensue.

The indulgence of starting over

"How many people get this kind of opportunity at this point in their career?"

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

When former America's Test Kitchen director and educator Christopher Kimball told The New York Times he wasn't afraid to fail in May, he really meant it.

"They were like 'Will he succeed?' and I'm like, 'What's the worst that can happen?' And I stand by that," the 65-year-old Cambridge, Massachusetts, resident says about his new $6 million project, Milk Street Kitchen, a one-stop-shop cooking venture in downtown Boston, all done through its founder's fresh set of eyes.

"We'll be successful; I don't know how successful, but it's fun and it's building out a loft and kitchen where people can hang out," he continues.

His abrupt November departure from America's Test Kitchen, the household recipe and media empire he co-built, was indeed shocking; but that was the catalyst for something new.

And yes, there's a shiny new kitchen and loft setup in the Flour & Grain Exchange building on Milk Street in downtown Boston. The new operation will encompass cookbook development, multimedia productions and a culinary school using methods Kimball has learned from around the world.

He calls in after a visit to the Milk Street location (under construction) where he notes, "It's going to cost me a million dollars, but after the fact, I'll be really excited to move in."

How long has the idea for Milk Street Kitchen been in the back of your mind?

I'd say three or four years ago, I started cooking differently. I made a lot of [recipes from] Yotam Ottolenghi or Ana Sortun, and my cooking changed all of a sudden. I was thinking differently. I thought it was, at first,

Christopher Kimball — an icon in the industry — has something cooking in his Milk Street Kitchen. PROVIDED quote-unquote "ethnic food," a term I can't stand, but then I realized, I was just cooking.

If you lived in Mexico City, you wouldn't be making "Mexican food" — you're cooking dinner. People all around the world are thinking differently about how food works — the stuff I've been doing for 20 years. It's just a range. I didn't want to just replicate things, I wanted to cook better.

Was there an a-ha moment for you, where you realized this was what you wanted to pursue?

There were a few. Sizzling greens from Fuchsia Dunlop was one. You can take Swiss chard, blanch them for two or three minutes and take the thick stems out. Heat a quarter cup of oil with grated ginger and scallions until it sizzles; then you add a quick dash of soy sauce and chili oil. It takes three minutes. Nobody blanches their greens anymore, but you can with this simple scallion sauce. It's a less universal technique, but it changed my entire way of thinking about greens.

What will be unique about Milk Street's approach to food?

Most cooking schools are about teaching someone to make a recipe. Obviously, you need how to teach [how to make a dish] too, but it's more about thinking about recipes and how to deconstruct them. It's a little bit of music theory; there's a key and a counterpoint bass line, then melody and chords. If you think of a recipe like chicken noodle soup, noodles are the baseline and chicken is the key. Then, if you look at it in a smart way, the herbs and spices and other things are the melody. Then there's texture and taste.

If you look at those, you're teaching people how to think about food, not just make a recipe. And over time, that makes a better cook. It's not about knife skills, it's how and what you're putting [ingredients and techniques] together. My cooking has gotten twice as good as it was two or three years ago.

In your career, you've seen food photography and multimedia reach a new level. What will Milk Street's approach to visuals be?

You mean that semi-pornographic approach to food photography? [Laughs] I just had a meeting with my editor and art director, and if you pick up any 20 new books that are well-produced, they'll all have spectacular photography. On one hand, that's great, but we're trying to make our food feel real and approachable. There's an energy to that. I want to stay away from the picture-perfect. I want movement and imperfections from a real home kitchen; I think if the food's too perfect, it removes you from making it.

It's like fashion photography and Bill Cunningham, who I think is brilliant. He brought street fashion into homes in a way where you felt like you could appreciate it. I like street fashion, and I like that feeling of everyday kitchen photography.

Now that you've heard everyone and their brother's opinions about you leaving America's Test Kitchen and your new endeavor, how are you feeling? Any regrets?

This is the most fun I've ever had in my life. I didn't know I could work this hard. There's nothing better in the world than sitting around a table with smart people and arguing about an idea and turning an idea into something that people look at on a piece of paper or a screen or in a book.

We have the fortune of starting with a fresh palette and rethinking everything I've done. I've brought on a lot of people I've worked with over the years, but a also different cast of characters. I don't have to deal with 200 employees. It's small and we can get stuff done, make decisions in an hour.

I'm not alone in saying I've made plenty of mistakes. This is an opportunity to do it all over again. How many people get this kind of opportunity in their career?

The bachelor pad: a room-by-room upgrade

Expert tips on adulting your apartment.

MONICA WEYMOUTH
letters@metro.us

Maybe you're finally single. Maybe you're regrettably single. Maybe you're strategically single, as usual, thank you very much. Whatever the case, gentlemen, you have one thing in common: Your bachelor pad could likely use a little work. As fall arrives and nesting season begins, we caught up with Patty Frischman and Tanhya Schimel — founders of SimplyHome2, a NYC-based design service specializing in settling clients into new homes — for room-by-room upgrade advice.

The kitchen

Even men who know their way around the kitchen tend to be unprepared for company. "What we find in most men's bachelor kitchens is the bare minimum—often times, they have a single pot and pan," says Frischman. "The first thing we do is fill the cabinets with a variety of sizes of cookware so they can prepare a real meal. It's also nice to have a cheese board and a couple of other serving dishes and trays." Honorable mention: a set of legit knives, just in case Whole Foods stops selling pre-chopped veggies.

The living room

Your Xbox is important, and no one is questioning its place in your life or your living room. But you need to give it — and all of its friends — a proper home. "A nice modern media console to house your television, cables and wires is an essential," says Schimel. "We also love an area rug, and decorative pillows and a throw can really bring the room together."

See, it looks like a grownup lives here. ISTOCK

The bedroom

Gentleman, those flannel sheets belong at camp, not on your grown-man bed. "Fresh white linens with or without a border are essential to every man's master bedroom," says Schimel. "A cozy blanket at the end of the bed is a nice touch as well."

How does one makeover a bathroom for $50? Like this: "A garbage can as opposed to a plastic bin is a nice upgrade,"

For months, going on years, Robert Kraft and the Patriots' brass have said that they've had Brady's back during Deflategate. Kraft and the Pats continue to talk a big game, but they've routinely come up two to three yards short during the countless opportunities they've had to go full Al Davis on the league.

It's cute that the Patriots had Brady's No. 12 as their official team avatar over the summer (they don't anymore, FYI), and it's adorable that they raised that banner at Gillette with Brady's face and put a No. 12 atop a lighthouse tower this past week. But none of these gestures are real, true protests of what will go down as the most unjustified suspension in the history of major North American professional sports.

Robert Kraft needs to do more in the way of protesting Tom Brady's four-game suspension. GETTY IMAGES

Now, I get that outrage subsides over the course of time. Fans are certainly not as pissed off about Deflategate as they were 14 months ago, and the Patriots have seemingly come to terms with the league suspending the face of the NFL for a quarter of a brief 16-game season. Yeah, some of that outrage will come back next week if Jimmy Garoppolo throws three picks and the Pats get blown out in Arizona this Sunday night. People will be screaming, "Why is this happening again?!"

But, make no mistake, fans and the Patriots have definitely become apathetic about all things flattened balls.

That needs to change in a hurry. Kraft and the Patriots absolutely need to show over the course of the next month that they truly have the back of the most important player in franchise history. They should play mind games with the league, fully expecting to be fined and fined a lot.

Here are a few ideas for Bobby K. and Co.:

- 1 They should spray-paint the No. 12 — in black — in both end zones, minus the Patriots logo.
- 2 They should have a sand painter create a giant portrait of Brady at the 50-yard line instead of the Patriots logo.
- 3 They should wear No. 12 decals on their jerseys and helmets.
- 4 All those other garbage NFL field logos that typically show up on TV (Kickoff 2016!) should be replaced with a black No. 12.
- 6 Kraft should sit on a giant couch in the south end zone with Jastremski, McNally, Gisele and Tom Brady Sr. in all three home games at Gillette during the suspension.
- 7 And most importantly, Garoppolo should include, "F Goodell!" in his play-call cadence throughout the game. (BLUE 42! ... OMAHA! ... 52's the Mike! ... F Goodell! ... HUT!!!)"

The NFL's in-the-bag TV partners will not care about the Brady No. 12 atop the lighthouse. They will not care about the giant Brady poster. Their cameras will be fixed on the field of play, and that is where the Patriots should go all out in protesting the suspension of the great No. 12.

Brady already cannot show his face at Gillette Stadium as this ridiculous suspension is underway. It would be really nice of the Krafts to finally do No. 12 a solid — no matter how much money they are fined by that insane red head in New York.

Red Sox have had an odd road trip so far

The Red Sox will wrap up their three-game set in San Diego on Wednesday (9 p.m., NESN) with David Price getting the ball for the Sox (14-8, 3.92 ERA). The Padres will counter with Jared Cosart (0-2, 5.14 ERA).

The Sox were a game out in the AL East on Tuesday afternoon and were a game up in the AL Wild Card standings — ahead of the Orioles and Tigers.

Boston has had an odd road trip so far as it totaled 27 runs in just two games against the A's last Friday and Saturday night. On Sunday against Oakland and on Monday against the Padres, however, the Sox' bats went cold as they scored just one run in the two outings.

The Red Sox are the last team in baseball that needs to worry about its offense though as it still leads MLB in runs scored with 752 on the season. The Sox easily have the most hits as a team this season as well, as their 1,378 hits outpace second-place Colorado, which has 1,307.

The Sox have an off-day on Thursday and then finish up their road trip in a pivotal weekend series in Toronto. MATT BURKE

Aries Find a way to bring yourself closer to a loved one. Working alongside someone will help you find peace of mind and a plan to build a better future.

Taurus Don't fold under pressure, or it will cost you financially or emotionally. Draw on your experience and call the shots instead in order to avoid an uncomfortable situation.

Gemini Don't let emotional matters escalate. You are best off being kind and understanding, and offering positive gestures, not a verbal bashing.

Cancer Take pride in what you do and dominate whatever situation you face. An event that gives you a platform to speak and share your ideas will result in an interesting encounter.

Leo Listen attentively, but don't feel the need to give in to someone who doesn't share your values or ideals. Focus on self-improvement instead of trying to control or change others.

Virgo Get back to basics and make a point to reconnect with someone you miss or who you feel can contribute something to your life. A partnership looks promising.

Libra You'll have an awakening if you are willing to make changes. Doing things differently or updating the way you think will lead to progress. Don't back down.

Scorpio Emotions will surface and provide the energy and wherewithal required to get things done. Push forward and don't stop until you feel satisfied with your accomplishments.

Sagittarius Stop hiding out and evading issues that need to be addressed. You can't move forward until you tie up loose ends and rid yourself of the situation that is holding you back.

Capricorn Walk away from a bully or a situation that can lead to injury. Caution will help you avoid a mishap. Protect your home, word and reputation.

Aquarius Consider how your actions will influence the lives of the people you love. It's important not to act in haste, even if someone pressures you.

Pisces You will have the edge if you use emotional pleas and offer incentives to get others to see things your way. A partnership looks promising. EUGENIA LAST
